

FACTS ABOUT MODERN SLAVERY POST 45-DAY SUPPORT

Day
46

the day that support given to victims of modern slavery and trafficking ends

Potential victims of modern slavery are entitled to a 45 day 'rest and reflection period' when the Home Office is deciding their case. Once a decision has been reached victims have either 14 days or 48 hours (depending on the decision) to find accommodation and move out of the safe house

1

Upon leaving the safe house, no more Government support is provided and victims often struggle to find accommodation and work

2

Because of their vulnerable situation, many are targeted by human traffickers again and are left in worse situations

3

The lack of support is costly in the long run because survivors' situations often deteriorate to the point of needing a great deal of assistance

4

The Government acknowledged the need for post-safe house support and integration services in 2014.

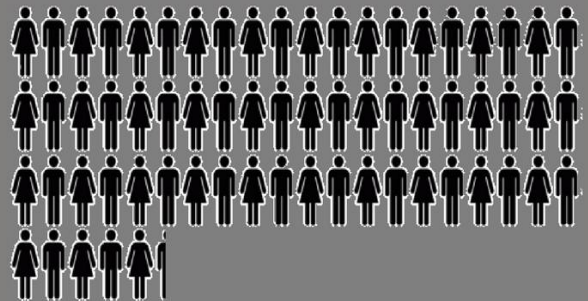

5

A victim centred approach is needed to ensure that survivors are given post 45-day support and can re-integrate into society
